It's very easy to write off shoes as being boring. But this is far from the truth. Whilst researching this article, for example, I discovered that Rieker is part of that human tradition of craftsmanship and problem-solving. Though the company has only been making fine shoes for 175 years or so, if you pick up a pair of their shoes you can see that they constitute the leading edge of a continuum of human development which stretches back to our primitive ancestry. So there's a heritage, a bedrock of knowledge about how good shoes should be made. And there's a tangible pride in the product you sense that the hands which have formed these shoes belong to people who are justifiably proud of what they do.

There are so many people in society today who never experience the joys of actually making something which can be consumed. But the workers of Rieker do. Their shoes are clearly smart options for the ambient conditions in which we all live. But a look at their later collections if you don't believe me! And, in their own way, they're every much as inventive as the atypical kundatsha in the woman's grass-stuffed boots.

For many people know that. For do many people realize that the shoes worn by the 7,000-year-old Cro-Magnon discovered a few years ago in the Italian Alps were made of leather and stuffed with grasses so that they provided sufficient insulation on the glacier.

Paul will give a fixed quote for any job. He's very quick so this makes sense for clients. Ordinarily he works from a home-office but will work onsite anywhere (and has done overseas). In a typical day he'd expect to generate up to 2,000 words of fresh copy or edit as many as 10,000 words. He charges nothing in respect of sundry expenses, and nor does he charge extra for unsocial hours. He'll often take on work overnight or during the weekends, so he's a great emergency stop-gap!

But, for those who want to employ him by the clock instead of simply to complete a job, typical charges (which are invariably pre-agreed) are as follows:

By the hour	£50 *
By the day (8 hours)	£400 *
By the week	£1,750 * (i.e. £350 per 8-hour day)

* Plus any travel costs including subsistence where appropriate and including travel time as being part of the working day - if necessary and pre-agreed.

WELCOME TO THE FUTURE EDUCATION WEBSITE

ALL teacher supply agencies should observe statutory legal requirements. Therefore most operate in similar ways. Yet all of them differ in the services they offer and the way they deliver them. In the case of Future Education however, we are genuinely different to other agencies.

A FAMILY BUSINESS HEADED BY A FORMER HEADMASTER
Future Education is a family owned and operated business. Our CEO and founder, David Headmaster, has been a headmaster for 27 years and contributes to some of our success. He has an absolute responsibility to ensure that the company operates with integrity and transparency so that its clients and employees can trust and respect our services. This is why Future Education has set up a Family Business Trust to ensure that the company remains in the hands of the family for as long as possible.

A FAMILY BUSINESS RUN BY THREE TEACHERS
All teacher agencies operate in a similar way and pass on to schools. But Future Education is run by three qualified and experienced teachers. Our CEO, David Headmaster, is a former headmaster. Our two other directors, David and Sarah, are both experienced as Classroom Managers and Recruitment Officers. This is why we can offer a service that is truly unique and tailored to the needs of our clients and teachers - and a guarantee that they are individuals, and the agency itself, are not being sold to a dynamic company.

NOT JUST CLASSROOM TEACHERS
Our team consists of experienced teachers, headteachers and private tutors. This is not to be confused with the term 'supply agency'.

POWER APPLICATIONS

MODERN AGRICULTURAL POWER

Modern agricultural equipment makes very special demands on engine performance. However, for example, some modern tractors and variable speed applications. During the last few years, the engine speed has had to be constant in order to avoid vibration, which is a major problem in the case of variable speed applications. The unit operates very much in a variable speed mode.
